MADAME MIDGE-HUNE

And the Extremes They Will Go to to

THE Russian Government has the reputation for possessing the most absolute and successful secret service in the world, and the reason for it is that in the service are employed in many women spies and female detective work has always proved remarkably efficient.

Russian women, unlike many of their male relatives, are quick-witted, diplomatic, far-seeing, resourceful and fearless. The real Muscovite woman is a born actress. She is a creature of deep emotions, but she can hide them wonderfully under all circumstances.

Their intuition is remarkable. They can pick up languages as quickly that even the French people admit that they master the subtleties of the French language, which they are scrupulously fond of that they speak it in such a way that the members of the French Academy can detect the difference. Mrs. Van Buren-Crozier, a most clever observer, is reported to have said that when a Russian is making love to you, you either succumb or fight for your life, and in the case of the women the men of all nations shrink. This very clever and witty woman might have come from the lips of one so clever and witty a woman as Mrs. Crozier. In any event, it makes no difference. It illustrates the idea.

Women the Best Spies.

The Russian Government has found that the women spies are cleverer than men, and the Czar's female representatives are all over the world, in every city of importance, yet they are rarely suspected of being what they are.

These women are close-mouthed, very brilliant and charming. In fact, Russian women are famous for their fascinating qualities. They win men easily and hold them on by the subtlest ways.

One of the most celebrated Russian spies is Madame Bliska. She is a very beautiful woman of high birth and perfect breeding, the way in Washington two years ago, was the name of Mrs. Bliska. She was the prettiest French and passed as a Russian woman, giving lessons in French to the children at some of the embassies, where she so deftly turned money that her government desired to know. She later went fully carrying out the instructions of the watch dogs of the Great White Bear.

Mrs. Bliska is perhaps most highly prized of all of the Russian Government women spies, because of her perfect breeding and wit and resourcefulness. One episode which happened in Paris three years ago illustrates her facility for always managing to make herself equal to the emergency.

Mrs. Bliska and the Nihilists. The Russian authorities had received information that a Nihilist plot against the Czar's life was to be consummated somewhere along the line of the railroad during a projected trip of the Czar. The men of the Russian Secret Police had everything except the details of where the attempted assassination was to take place and the name of the intended victim. Every possible man had been exhausted to acquire the needed information, but it had been found impossible to take the case of the chief Nihilist conspirator.

upon the general. The cults evident testimony of the poor colonel made that fact all the more apparent.

Mrs. Sitzki concluded that the general was in dire need of reinforcements of his own nationality. He also hovered near while the distraction progressed up to the point where the general took the fatal step, but the moment the general had recovered himself changing places with her after each step or two.

Probably Mrs. Sitzki was the only one where the air is fresher."

The general cheered, and while he stood by the window, leaning on Mrs. Gervais's shoulder. Mrs. Sitzki saw him enter and half fell upon a divan.

He was conducted to an ante-room where Mrs. Gervais insisted on attending him with her smiling smile. Mrs. Sitzki found it impossible to enter the room, but the moment the general had recovered himself changing places with her after each step or two.

"Oh, I've lost my ruby chain!"

"Diamond Cut Diamond."

Then she whispered to a person of a great Russian family, one of half a dozen ladies of her own nationality who were in the room. The princess laughed.

"Come," she said, "we will be as frank as gentlemen often are in the card room when we are even with a Russian. And I am addressed to the general and have a mark which assured the spy that it contained papers from the Czar's own hand."

"Oh, Mrs. Gervais," she said, "General K— will never forgive you. You have betrayed the papers he entrusted to you."

Mrs. Gervais was clever enough to do the only thing that remained for her to do. "Papers" she laughed. "How General K— would be the last person in the world in these days to distrust military secrets."

"Very well," said Mrs. Sitzki, "I will see that the general gets his papers at once. I am sure he was leaving the room, the princess said."

"Thank you, princess," said the princess, "but I have lingered too long already."

"You leave by the first train!"

"Yes, princess." And she did.

Mrs. Sitzki was a close mouth in the case of all Russian women.

Another position for strengthening the muscles of the back, shoulders and arms.

What a Mother May Do with a Bath Towel to Make Her Baby Girl Healthy and a Beauty All Through Life--If She Begins Early Enough.

By Charles Watson Bartlett, M. D., of the Massachusetts Medical Society.

late from her earliest years--free from most of the childhood diseases that usually fret her.

The first thing to do is to get the little girl to love her bath before she is a year old.

A clean, clear bath tub, with tepid water, that does not strike a chill into the child on entering, and a chance to splash and frolic in the water is the first essential.

This is play. Play is at the bottom of all healthful childish exercises.

So let the little girl play in her bath, and let her nurse or mother enter into the playful spirit as she is directing the little one's bath.

At the child grows plump and rosy in the bath from its exercise, cold water can be turned in--just enough in time up to its armpits, without having the baby girl come out of the bath with the suspicion of a shiver. That would spoil it all.

The Caution That a Mother Must Observe.

As soon as the little girl emerges from the bath, give her a towel to "play" with herself with.

much how much the child drew itself with the towel as the exercise it gets from trying to do it.

It would be quite unwise to try to make a little one-year-old child stand up straight and go through all the rubbing motions that a grown-up person might do.

In the first place, the child's bones and muscles of the legs and arms are not sufficiently developed. It would result in positive injury to put it through a formal course of exercises.

The content for another year with letting it just play with the towel, lie down on its back, kick its legs up and switch the towel around just as it pleases.

The main thing is to give the little girl a sense of pleasurable exercise and make her look forward with delight to the regular morning bath.

There is not much one can do to teach a baby systematic exercises until it reaches a certain stage of development, where the child has gained a mental control over all the muscles in the body. This period usually comes at the age of two and a half or three years.

Then let the mother or nurse gently direct the little girl in a regular system of exercises with the bath towel.

The child should not be taught to draw the bath towel across the back in a diagonal direction, as so to exercise the muscles of the shoulders, back and arms while keeping the body erect and the chest thrust out.

This should be done briefly. The throwing back of the shoulders will tend to expand the chest, and the little girl should be shown how to draw in long, deep breaths.

The exercise and the position of the body will make it easy and natural for the child to breathe properly.

In this exercise, which should continue for perhaps half a minute, the towel should be drawn across the back first at the waist line, then a little higher up, and so on until it is pulled across the shoulders.

Now to Properly Use the Turkish Towel.

Then the towel should be stretched out high above the little one's head and the child encouraged to breathe as deeply as possible, while the arms are thrown backward and wide apart. This will stretch out the little chest and make nature itself pump and fill the lungs full of air.

The little gymnast should then be given an entire change of position. Let her lie down on her back on the bath mat and kick up her little legs in frolic, while she tries to catch the towel first with one foot and then with the other, drawing the towel back and forth across the sole.

This is capital exercise for all the muscles in the body.

When the child gets up from the floor she ought to give the muscles of the abdomen a vigorous rubbing by pulling the towel across the part horizontally and then diagonally.

A splendid exercise for the legs, and to teach graceful poise of the body, is for the little girl to get on a foot lightly upon a chair while she rubs the leg from the thigh to the knee on both the inner and outer sides.

As soon as she can balance herself well enough the foot should be lifted from the chair, and the pose held while the rubbing goes on.

This is the most difficult of the Turkish bath towel exercises. But little girls soon ally like it best, and take delight in hopping about first on one foot and then on the other, while trying to go through the rubbing motions.

They make a kind of dance of it, and go through the prettiest kind of games.

It seems to appeal to the instinct to dance which is in every healthy little girl. Indeed, it may be called a first lesson in dancing.

Playing with the Bath and the Towel. These exercises need not take more than three to five minutes--and the bath that precedes them about the same length of time.

This will prevent the bath from weakening and the rubbing process from becoming tedious to the little one.

The good that will result will be not only in strengthening every muscle in the little body, but in getting up a perfect circulation.

There will be no danger of the child catching cold after the bath when she has gone through the vigorous exercise of rubbing herself down.

The little girl's system will be toned up so that she can resist colds, coughs and nearly all the little common ills to her age.

After the little athlete comes from an exercise bath like this there will not be a muscle in her body but what has had proper exercise.

One more thing that she might be taught to do after she has dressed.

Open the window wide, drop on her hands and knees, close her mouth and draw in a long, deep breath.

The smell of the fresh outdoor morning air will make this act almost involuntary.

Then let her hold her breath long enough to count three or four and exhale slowly. This will bring the glow of rosy health to her cheeks and she will run down to the breakfast table with a prodigious appetite and be the picture of robust health.

"Now, little athlete, drink."

With such a system of daily morning exercises there need be no more sickly little girls moaning about new diseases and after so outdoors because it is too cold, too hot or too stormy.

There is no reason why she should not grow up into beautiful symmetrical young womanhood, a more perfect type of the athlete girl than we have yet seen.

Drawing the bath towel across the back in a diagonal line, so as to exercise the muscles of the shoulders, back and arms.

A NEW method of physical culture at home for very little children is the Turkish bath towel system.

The bathroom is the gymnasium, and Drawing the towel across the small of the back to invigorate and strengthen it.

Let her lie down on her back and kick up her little legs in frolic while she tries to catch the towel with one foot, and draw it back and forth across the sole.

The nurse or mother is the director of the exercise. Just this simple equipment properly used, would willingly have married the plaintiff, and the favored lady in turn threatened a similar fate if he didn't.

Of course she will not do it very well at first. It will be just a comical imitation of the nurse's rubbing. But it isn't so

WHY SO MANY MEN LOVE AND RUN AWAY.

BY A BREACH OF PROMISE LAWYER.

THERE is a good deal of speculation as to why men are so reluctant to marry, but one reason never occurs to the speculators, and that is that many of them are afraid to.

I remember as a boy an amusing specimen of this kind of man. He was a farmer, and was as notorious for his enormous extravagance as for his ingenuity in getting out of them when marriage began to loom next. It was said that he had been engaged a dozen times, and though he left all his fiancées in the lurch he never found any difficulty in getting a successor. One day my father, who was his lawyer, asked him: "Why don't you get married, John. It isn't for want of opportunities, you know, and it's quite time you thought of settling down."

"Well, sir," John answered, "it's this way. You see, I like courting well enough, but I can never summon up pluck to go any further. To tell you the truth, I'm afraid of getting tied for life to one of 'em."

If you have heard many breach of promise suits you will have observed that this wholesome dread of matrimony is the cause of a good proportion of them, though all the defendants have not the courage to say so.

One effort of mine had allowed matters to proceed right to the verge of the wedding day, when he disappeared mysteriously, and was not discovered for some months. The young lady promptly sued him for damages for breach, and at the hearing the reasons for his conduct came out. He admitted that he was fond of the girl, but under exhibitions of her temper and jealousy which he had witnessed had no secret that he simply hadn't the courage to marry her.

In another case in which a widow sued a widower for playing her false, the defendant put in a singular plea. It seems that the widow's family strongly objected to the match, and as passive opposition was useless to prevent it, one of the sons, a wealthy young fellow, called on the middle-aged widow and told him that if he persisted in his suit, he--the son--would give him such a thrashing as would effectually curb him of any further sentiment. "No what could I do?" the defendant pathetically asked.

The more one sees behind the scenes, the more one realizes that there is often a great deal to be said for the man who loves and runs away. One of my clients a few years ago found himself in an awkward quandary. He had engaged himself to three girls at different times, and, "tiring" could his engagements with the last was on the verge of marrying No. 3. No object was his intention known, that the two ill-fated ladies threatened him with legal proceedings if he persisted in his proposed marriage, and the favored lady in turn threatened a similar fate if he didn't.

Another pose to strengthen the muscles of the legs.

The mother-in-law is often a fatal dis-price. One man whom I defended last year from a habit of daily morning exercise that she is likely to continue all her life long. It is better than sending her to a gymnasium, where more muscle-making feats are taught.

It is not so much muscles that girls need as a symmetrical development of the whole body.

This exercise strengthens the arms, the neck and the shoulders.

It is not so much muscles that girls need as a symmetrical development of the whole body.

This is not merely physical culture, either. Making the child's body respond perfectly to every impulse of the mind, strengthens and brightens the mind.

The child will be a more apt pupil in school.

There will be no danger of her becoming a victim of that new disease, euchaemia acholastica, so common among school and college girls, that look of irritability, which comes from an unsatisfied nervous system, arrested muscular development and disordered digestion.

If little Miss Athlete is properly started in her Turkish bath towel exercises at her third year and carefully added through this daily gymnastic system for the next three or four years, the chances are that she will keep up the practice after that of her own accord, both from force of habit and from the sense of joyful well-being and exuberant health which it gives her.

A SILVER DIME SHE COULD NOT SPARE.

A few months after the crash she was living in a rooming house that contained her home. They plainly derived the name of the street from the position of the family woman at Ardley Park, now otherwise only a memory. Having made the arrangement she withdrew, but almost instantly returned and picked up a lot of silver—a dime—which she had on the counter.

He will take the money to the world."

She was Miss Lindley, sister of Daniel Lindley, who became Edward M. Field's partner. But this was not until Field had been in the East for some time. The trader came to the attention of T. W. Trumbull & Field, North, near Wall Street, who were for the oldest son of Cyrus W. Field. Even as a boy he felt the weight of his father's name on his shoulders. When he reached manhood in the early sixties the firm was on its wicket legs, and he was determined to do things in that direction. But his father had shown himself a brilliant financier. Cyrus W. Field had not only created the ocean cable system, but had financed it. And now he was a power in other legal enterprises. So if it was

One of these was a loan of $125,000 by Field to the Union Trust Co. of New York, for which he took the time to go collateral. When the company was to repay the loan Field was to return the security on the ground that it was his money, and his son did not Cyrus W. Field was proud of his boy and believed in him. He furnished the capital necessary to make him partner member of the Wall Street firm of Telfr, Tremont & Field, and himself became a special partner to the extent of $250,000. The firm was successful from the beginning, and his profits grew big. The "wheel deal" and the "can cream" were among the new speculative games which Telfr, Tremont & Field learned and played.

NO SECOND FIDDER TO JAY GOULD:
In 1879 Telft and Trumbull retired and Daniel Lindley, Edward M. Peabody's brother-in-law, entered the firm. Cyrus W. Peabody retaining his special interest. The business continued to prosper, though in 1887 the firm was caught in the collapse of the wheat market just at a time when Manhattan "L" and other firms was a large holder—suffered a sharp decline. But the

It was at about this period that Edward M. Field began to show impatience over the comparatively meagre life his firm was making in the banana world. He was well living up to the record of his father. The son of the founder of the ocean cable surely ought not to play second fiddle to Jay Gould! The sight of Gould came to inspire him as a bull is inspired at the sight of a red flag.

Presently he began to take a strange interest in the fate of sinners, always saying that there was often sufficient reason for each deed. They did not dream that he was thus defiling his own acts—that as his bidding women had signed transfers of their stock without knowing the nature of the papers to which they put their signatures; that a poor tailor had paid him $1,500 for two Northern Pacific bonds and was sleeping with perfect trust day after day the explanation:

BACK TO HIS BED TO DIE.

It was on Sunday. Feeling a little stronger than at any time of late, Cyrus W. Field rose from his bed and went to the window. He saw two strangers now walking up and down in front of the house. In his mind he decided to make some of them. During the proceedings his attitude was that of an idiot. As one of the Mr. Justice was about to enter the court, he declared the jury and washed his hands of the case. The court instantly was in session. Field never moved. He was startled, as usual, on a table, his head buried in his arms—he was not there, and never has been, since. This the fight went on for a year or two, when everybody minut told him the truth.

"Those men are detectives," he said to his doctor.

The physician nodded. The old man needed no further information. He returned to his bed and never again left it lying.

And then came the great debt between Edward M. Field's victimized Ozone who struggled to prove his innocence. He was dragged down from Broadway. He slept a few nights in a cell. He was released and arrested again. He lived some weeks in Ludlow Street Jail, where he refused to eat and raved about the vengeance of Jay Gould. Perhaps eccentricity excused him.

Two days before Christmas a White House year declared him innocent. A year before he had been the host of a gay party of millionaires.

Two months later he was placed on the watch again on fresh charges. A final legal battle between Delaney Nicoll and Bourke ward M. Field, son of the late Cyrus W. Field, ALWAYS BACK TO THE SLAVE. But neither the family nor the attorney could do more for the saint than protect the Court's sentence. After a few days he disappeared, to reenter his law associations in Bell's Kitchen, and to periodically afterward find himself again before a Magistrate, always on the same charge—vagrancy and drunkenness.

Meaning his street son, Cyril W. Fox, all acknowledge him self as a playboy, and was winning a stiff footing in New York. His wife, left posthumous after the crash, was staid by old friends, like Chauncy M. Dopey and Abram K. Hewitt, is selling up as an authority on horse breeding. The managed to see that the other boys were well educated—David Dodley, Woolsey, Thorold F. and Edward M. Field, Jr.

A few years ago the mother and her four younger sons gave up the fight to re-establish themselves in New York society with such a handicap. They went to South Africa, where Mrs. Edward M. Field is said to be now living. Three of the boys are

What the disaster cost the family of Edward M. Field has already been indicated, except with reference to the son who had already made a fair, independent start in life— Cyrus W. Field, Jr., the physician. The cost to him must have been considerable for his young wife, a favorite in the best social set, shortly afterward heavily opened a millinery shop and set to work energetically to share her husband's losses.

The ship succeeded. For once the dainty and debilitated with whom Mrs. Field had associated on equal terms exhibited the reverse of a snobbish disposition. They rallied around their former social companion, giving the most practical encouragement to one who was not too proud to help herself. When she saw that she would be successful, Mrs. Field began to reflect upon the precarious position of most young women whose education has inclined to sort of training.

"I am going to bring up our daughter according to those of my own," she said. "She shall learn a trade. Fortunes are so quickly scattered in this country that one should always be prepared for the hurricane of disaster. A girl should always be independent. She should be able to support herself and should never marry except for love."

When Edward M. Field next emerged from the alcove, some six weeks ago, he tumbled to the door of Henry A. Brigg, at New in 1891.

Although it was evident that Edward M. Field was nearing the end of his days, the hospital experts found his mind unclouded. He was given medical treatment, and a week ago was released—presumably at the re-

That great insanity trial, in the light of the judgment of Malvern experts recently upon the son's intellect, is more interesting than ever. Burke Cockran declared that insanity was hereditary; that the two preceding generations of the Field family had been weak minded. He showed that the grandfather of the defendant died an imbecile; that his great grandfather died a lunatic; that his sister was actually insane. He showed that the defendant's great uncle was a madman. He showed insanity in other collateral branches. He showed the point.

He did not attempt, though, to show that the defendant's father was insane. If he could have it would be regrettable that there are not more inmates like him.

Cyrus Field could have stood indifferently. Bankruptcy would have been no disgrace. He might have gone to his grave a beggar and yet retained his self-respect. But his honor, which he prized more highly than he prized his wealth, was gone. His new had brought disaster upon a family whose name stood as high as that of any in the nation, and which three members in one generation had made illustrious in the law, in the church, and in

CREATOR OF FASHION FOR THE FASHIONABLE WOMEN OF AMERICA

Will the Threatened Invasion of the Fashionable Coming Hoop-Skirt Win, or Will the Women Rebel Against It?

A—Fetching shirred frock in newest Parisian style. A sheer Summer suggestion.

WOMEN with good figures are holding their hands high in protest against the threatened invasion of the hoopskirt and even women without any more figure than a telegraph pole or a hoghead do not look with favor upon a style that made their grandmothers look like feathered tigs in the middle.

Looks and feelings, however, at this stage in the evolution of an old fashion are as nothing to what they will be when the fashion takes hold of us—as it may do. Its forerunner is a hoopskirt—for the skirt can scarcely be called by any other name—which we already have with us. The hoopskirt is a sweet little affair of white tulle with several rows of corded pla tucks interspersed with several rows of pinked ruffling. Beneath the ruffling discreetly hide bones of a stiffness similar to that worn in the old-time hoopskirt, and however discreetly the bones may hide, they are like those skeletons that families are supposed to keep locked up in closets, for they will inevitably "out."

Will Women Have the Hoopskirt or Defy It?

Poupin is distinctly and radically opposed to the innovation of the hoopskirt, and so am I. There is a possibility that we are taking fright for nothing because women have been educated into so much artistic taste in dress and have such decided opinions of their own in the matter that it seems as though they would quickly squelch a fashion that will make most of them look as ungainly as they would appear ridiculous. However, there is no getting over the fact that some of the leading couturiers of Paris are turning out skirts that are practically old-time crinolines revived, and these have their following. In a modified form the crinoline is with us—across the water, as yet, but floating this way. The petticoat has already landed and we cannot be sure what will follow. It depends upon the women themselves whether they will have the crinoline or not, and there are women who will sacrifice golf, tennis, squash, croquet and yachting for the crinoline if once they think it will be fashionable.

Think of a woman throwing the discus this Summer, in true old Roman style, with a hoopskirt bobbing up with every movement and destroying that grace of motion which is making the game a popular one among women!

Let Me Warn You Against Too Many Pettis.

To women I would say that danger lurks in the too-frilly frill. In order to hold out the overplus of frills and give them their own value, some foundation other than that bestowed by nature and a starched petticoat will be necessary. I do not warn against frills, only against too many of them.

There is, too, a danger in the new shirred skirt. It is a difficult thing and even the best of Parisian dressmakers sometimes make failures of it. The skirt is very pretty and smart, but it must be made "just so," and hang in the right angle or all its lines of beauty will be lost and it will be a bungle.

A successful shirred skirt is shown in figure A. A gown of soft, sheer material shirred in several rows below the belt, to give a good set to the skirt; shirred four times around the skirt in wide bands of several rows of shirring each, headed by a frill formed by shirring a tuck in the skirt at the top of every band. There is a wide interval of shirred skirt between each band and this, of course, is what it will be seen that the shirring is arranged so that the skirt hangs gracefully and looks ruffy and yet clinging in a certain manner. Nothing really costs, now-a-days in the way of a skirt.

The bands are headed by a shirred tuck, but another shirred tuck at the bottom of each.

The bodice has a stock and yoke of transparent lace with a pointed slope down the shoulder of the yoke upon the arm. The front also slopes down well. A band of several rows of shirring, headed by a ruffle, frames the yoke and furnishes fullness to the lower part of the bodice. Owing to the slope of the yoke on the shoulder this band droops upon the arm in a loop-shoulder effect that is quite graceful. The bodice is in bolero shape, with rounded front coming to a point at the bust where they are held together by a bow of lace, tied quite full and with long ends falling down the front. The bottom of the bolero has three rows of shirring, ending in a ruffle, over a full skirt that shows below the bolero in front. The giraffe is wide and drawn to fit. The full sleeves are gathered into several rows of shirring at the elbow and wrist, over a deep flounce of lace. The lace flounce ends midway between the elbow and wrist in the new style of sleeve.

What I Think Is a Very Smart Idea in Shirring.

Figure B shows another style of the popular shirred skirt. This one is gathered with the wide and around the middle of the skirt is set a flounce with two rows of shirring and a shirred tuck at the top. The tuck forms a frill which is repeated in the frill and shirring in the top of the second flounce attached to the bottom of the first. These flounces make a very full skirt, which touches the ground all around. In fact the skirt may be said to drag all around, and a woman must acquire the new walk in order to wear such a skirt successfully.

There is a cute little jacket to this gown, which is for outdoor wear, and the jacket is square and loose and falls below the waist. It is finished all around with a ruffle made just like the skirt ruffle, only much narrower. The shirred effect is continued by a band, shirred on the edges, which finishes the neck and extends down the fronts, inside the ruffle, to the bottom of the jacket. A cape collar of lace extends from this shirred band around the neck to the line of the armholes where it meets a ruffle. The full short sleeves are shirred at the elbow and end in a flounce over a deep ruffle of lace. There is a lace tuck with cascades of lace down the front, worn with this jacket, which lies open in front to show the cascades of lace.

This dress does not seem very difficult, but the shirring is set in just the right way to give the best effect, and few can achieve such successful results with them.

In figure C we have an example of how the very best of Parisian modistes can make a failure of a shirred skirt. This one is of changeable tulle and it has three rows of shirring around the hips and three shirred tucks around the middle of the skirt. Three wider, graduated tucks, encircle the skirt at the knee, shirred as are the others, and three very wide, graduated and shirred tucks finish the bottom of the skirt. The last tuck is like a wide hem. The effect of these shirred tucks, placed as they are and of the width used, is not at all that can be desired and the result of this handsome, but unsuccessful gown, is to warn people how not to place their shirring and tucks.

A Fascinating Little Humbug of a Skirt.

The bodice is quite Frenchy and very pointed in front. It has a shirred point that comes well down on the skirt in a sharp point in front and the material of the bodice is drawn to a close fit with only effect of softness.

There is no giraffe and little to take away from the severity of the bodice lines. The décolletage is round in cut and not very low, and the short sleeves are very full to the elbow, where they end in a ruffle. With this bodice is worn one of the loose new wraps of tulle made to go with gowns and trimmed in a manner to harmonize with the gowns with which they are worn.

We have in illustration D a fascinating little humbug of a hoopskirt, in which the bones are concealed beneath pinked ruffles and white tulle and the intervals of silk between the ruffles daintily corded in the tucks—to make the skirt further stand out—the whole so pretty that it pretends to us to be something else than that bungalow we all know and hate.

In figure E is illustrated a very smart little Summer frock of blue linen, which is fitted with an inconspicuous white figure. The skirt is pleated in a fetching manner and the frill trimming is the only striking thing about it. This is wide, and white lace head with solid squares of breast ornaments at intervals. The same broad extends entirely around the very short jacket, which is a sort of bolero kimono, for the pleated fronts and back of the bolero seem one with the wide and very short pleated skirt. The sleeves are also bound with the wide band and the fronts are trimmed with white broad buttons and loops on each side. The front box pleat in the skirt is also trimmed on each side the top with similar white broad buttons and loops. A shaped collar piece fits about the shoulders and to this is attached the pleated bolero fronts and back. The bolero is worn over a dainty white lingerie shirtwaist with fluffy white sleeves extending midway between the elbow and the wrist.

The shirring of tucks gives a new departure from the simple rows of shirring that we have had for some months. The gathered tuck, too, forms a ruffle of double thickness that gives "body" to the skirt of materials and makes the dress stand out and shirring never would enable it to do so. In shirred dress there is a charm about the frilly and yet simple prettiness of the shirred tuck that is very attractive, still, as I have said, danger lurks in the too-frilly frill and women will do well to beware of the costume, however attractive, that will land them, not upon the shoals, but the reefs of crinolines.

HOOGLIGAN IN AGAIN! CAN YOU GET HIM OUT AGAIN?

Copyrighted, 1904, by the American Journal-Examiner.

Hooligan starts from 1 in the upper left hand corner of the cage, and the policeman from 61 in the opposite corner. Place the counters on these starting places to represent the men, and move them in order 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63. The policeman, represented by one counter, can move from 61 to 58, 55, 52, 49, 46, 43, 40, 37, 34, 31, 28, 25, 22, 19, 16, 13, 10, 7, 4, 1. From wherever they stop they must move on in a straight line again when their turn comes around.

The object of the game is for Hooligan to escape. If he can reach 1 he is safe. The policeman must try to drive him back to his corner, No. 61. Hooligan and the policeman must keep out of sight of each other by not crossing a straight line on which the other is standing at that time. For instance, if Hooligan is on 10, the policeman must not cross 11, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61. If he does he loses the game. The same rule applies to Hooligan if he is trapped by the policeman.

BOSTON AMERICAN, SUNDAY, MAY 8, 1904.

THE DIGNITY OF SILENCE.

Judicious Silence Forms and Expresses Character. Its Importance and Value Are Not Sufficiently Appreciated in This Country.

URS is a TALKING country.

Talk, talk, talk, is the constant occupation of nearly all our citizens, while awake.

Millions of us spend all of our busy hours TALKING because we want to sell goods, TALKING because we want to sell life insurance, TALKING because we want an opportunity to sell something.

When we stop talking for a moment in the street cars or elsewhere, we pick up a newspaper and let the reporters and editors begin to TALK to us.

We cannot have a dinner without following it by two or three hours of talk. The man who fails to get up on his feet and talk words upon words at every possible opportunity is looked upon as a defective American.

We consider the English dense and inhuman because they occasionally neglect an opportunity to talk trivialities to someone they never saw before. We teach parrots to talk, crows to talk; we even teach bullfinches to talk. We invented the first talking machines, and when we have a moment or two to ourselves in a railroad station or elsewhere we drop a penny or a nickel in the slot and start one of these machines to talking, as though a talkless hour would blacken and disgrace our lives.

Suburbanites in their railway trains talk all the way to town and all the way back again. The village men gather in the village store to talk. No village picture is genuine unless it represents the leading citizens on barrels, TALKING.

Talk is useful and necessary, we know that. Ideas must be exchanged, orders given, information imparted, through talk.

But there is no necessity for the endless and eternal American talk, aimless and ceaseless, like the buzzing of the telegraph wires in the wind.

Is man ALL mouth and ears?

Is nothing worth THINKING about?

Talk, of course, develops our facility for glib expression.

But is it not more important to develop the THINKING side than the talking side?

You, the average American, have talked or listened to talk not less than six hours a day since you were three years old. How much of the talk of others taught you anything? How much of YOUR talk made others any wiser?

There is great force and value in silence.

The little brook rages and murmurs and talks on its way. The great deep river is still.

The really great men of the world have all been relatively silent men. They have talked when they really had something to say—which means that even the greatest said very little.

Success in this world comes from mental concentration, from the power to center all the forces of the mind for a long period on the problem to be solved.

A man constantly talking, like a rattly, noisy machine, is an inferior product. The greater the development the less noise and friction, in man or machine.

The greatest men are the silent men, because, no matter how great a man may be naturally, he must use all the power that is in him to get in ahead of others and develop himself to the full. If he had the shallow, gossiping character which our national life does so much to develop, he would be one of the talkers, instead of being one of the doers.

How many men do you know of with excellent ideas, able to TALK intelligently and convincingly on a dozen different schemes, yet unable to make a success of any one?

If the energy they used up in talking were diverted to concentrated mental work, they might make a success of at least one scheme, and in the course of their lives achieve something more useful than merely adding to the great volume of talk.

It is not necessary in this country to present the other side of the question. It is not necessary to point out that talk is essential to mental com-munionship, that truth and original discovery are born of an interchange of ideas. Nobody in this country is in any danger of not appreciating talk at its full value. But we are ALL of us in danger of forgetting the value and the beauty of silence, the strength that it gives to character, the balance that earnest, silent effort gives to the mind.

For the present this is enough of a talk about talk. Finish the editorial in your own minds silently and digest this text, written by one who was a thinker and not a talker—the great Carlyle:

Silence and secrecy! Altars might still be raised to them (were this an altar-building time) for universal worship. Silence is the element in which great things fashion themselves together, that at length they may emerge, full formed and majestic, into the daylight of life, which they are henceforth to rule. Not William the Silent only, but all the considerable men I have known, and the most undiplomatic and unstrategic of these forbore to babble of what they were creating and projecting. Nay, in their own mean perplexities, do thou thyself but HOLD THY TONGUE FOR ONE DAY: on the morrow how much clearer are thy purposes and duties; what wreck and rubbish have these mute workmen within thee swept away, when intrusive noises were shut out! Speech is too often not, as the Frenchman defined it, the art of concealing Thought, but of quite stifling and suspending Thought, so that there is none to conceal. Speech, too, is great, but not the greatest. As the Swiss inscription says: Sprechen ist silbern, schweigen ist goldern. (Speech is silver, silence is golden); or, as I might rather express, Speech is of Time, Silence is of Eternity.

Bees will not work except in darkness; Thought will not work except in Silence; neither will Virtue work except in secrecy.

Amasses in Mourning

Of course, the Amsons are in deep mourning for the groom. Young Mrs. Amson has given up mourning colors, however, and has blossomed out in the blue of spring gowns. She will undoubtedly be the prettiest nation in the church. Her two little daughters, one of whom is a bridesmaid, are in mourning. Mrs. Amson's classmates at Harvard and her friends in Boston will be drawn upon for brides. In all respects the wedding will be of very lively interest to all as well as Fifth avenue.

FOUR PROMINENT SOCIETY WOMEN ORGANIZE SOCIAL BOARD OF STRATEGY IN FASHIONABLE NEWPORT.

SOCIAL BOARD OF STRATEGY IN SESSION.

MRS. STUVEGANT FISH MRS. GEORGE J. GOULD MRS. O. H. P. BELMONT MRS. HERMANN OELRICHS

Four social women gravely discussing plans of candidates for admission into Newport's smart set, preparatory to passing judgment, which shall be without appeal.

Mrs. Fish, Mrs. Gould, Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont and Mrs. Oelrichs Will Decide as to Entry to Smart Set at Summer Colony.

It is announced that Mrs. George J. Gould, Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, Mrs. Stuegant Fish and Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont have constituted themselves "A Social Board of Strategy" during the coming season, and before their quadruple with Bostonians and New Yorkers alike must bow.

Conducting dinner dates, questions of social precedence, rivalry for the leadership of select society, and a host of heart-burning questions that have agitated society's summer resort during past seasons will be disposed of by the self-constituted board. Titled "Four Social Women," they will be the arbiters of all social questions during the season.

Mrs. Gould's Footing Firm. This alliance marks the final step of Mrs. Gould's long and hard fight with her $200,000 estate of jewels in which she was recently shot. It is expected that she will add to it the jewels of the estate, which she has been fighting for since the death of her husband.

Distinctions Difficult. Boston society is somewhat divided with fashionable New York society. It is expected that the social board will be able to make distinctions when one reaches Newport.

Special cable to Sunday American. May 7.—The loss of the Prince of Wales's son, Prince George, has caused a great deal of interest in the social world. It is expected that the social board will be able to make distinctions when one reaches Newport.

Brooks and Shaw. It is in the Brooks family that the New family were so prominently identified with Newport up to the time of the death of Mrs. Brooks. The family was a prominent one in the Newport society.

Handsome Private Bedroom. National Theatre, of Boston, is another of the most handsome private bedrooms in the city. It is a room of the hotel which is a very handsome one.

Other Representatives. Mrs. Stuegant Fish, Mrs. George J. Gould, Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, and Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs are the four social women who have constituted themselves "A Social Board of Strategy" during the coming season.

FOR SALE BY ALL NE

While trade has been dull our sales are away ahead. This we account for by our liberal policy of doing business. If you are a stamp collector, your stamps, to say the least, are as good as the best, our premiums better. We give more stamps than any other large house. When you get only one stamp with a 10c. purchase, you are obliged to buy $99.00 worth to fill a book, one book secures 1 premium. We give triple stamps (3 stamps with each 10c. purchase), which enables you to fill 3 books by purchasing $99.00 worth; 3 books secure 3 premiums. What is more vital to you, our prices are less for the same value, and we cheerfully refund the money.

A New Process For the Manufacture of Sulphuric Acid

An Hydrochloric Acids which is far in advance of the Old Methods of More than 40 Years.

What here follows is an earnest, conscientious effort to convey to the reader solid facts in connection with a most important scientific discovery. It may not be generally known that there is in the world today one method of manufacturing sulphuric acid which is far in advance of the old methods of more than 40 years.

AND IN CONNECTION WITH THIS GREAT SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY THERE IS OFFERED A RARE OPPORTUNITY FOR AN EXCEEDINGLY PROFITABLE INVESTMENT TO ALL WHO WILL INVESTIGATE AND ACT QUICK.

There lives in Boston a man who has devoted himself to scientific research—to experiment, study and labor in this sphere. He has invented a process which will completely revolutionize the manufacture of sulphuric and hydrochloric acids.

The process invented by this gentleman differs from the present method of manufacture in the use of sulphuric acid by means of an electrolytic process. The process is simple, and the results are far in advance of the old methods of more than 40 years.

FOXY GRANDPA

The Boys Think They Caught Him Napping, but Really Grandpa had a Little Insomnia.

1. BOYS: "Gran'pa's napping again. We are in luck. Let's cover him with the rug."

2. BOYS: "Now for a few more things to pile on."

3. GRANDPA: "Well, now, those boys must think me easily caught."

4. BOYS: "Oh, say, this is too easy. Pile them on gently."

5. BOYS: "Now what a row there will be when Gran'pa awakens!"

6. GRANDPA: "Hello, boys! What are you doing under that sofa? Come out and let's have a little fun."

1. LULU: "Oh, look, there is Charley Onthespot painting. Let's go over and watch him. I love to watch artists at their work."
LEANDER (aside): "Confound it! That Charley Onthespot seems to be everywhere."

2. LULU: "What a lovely picture it will be when it is finished. Go right on with your work, Charley. Don't let us disturb you."
CHARLEY ONTHESPOT: "A few more touches, Lulu, and it will be finished. I intended to offer it to you, if Leander will not be jealous. Just wait and I will finish it."

3. LULU: "How very interesting! I could stand here watching you paint for hours, Charley. You are very clever. What is that thing in the background supposed to be?"
LEANDER (aside): "Ye gods! See how closely she stands to him. I am going crazy."

4. CHARLEY ONTHESPOT (between his teeth): "That, Lulu, is supposed to be a tree with a flock of birds on it."

5. LULU: "How dare you smear that horrid brush in my face? You did it on purpose. I don't want to hear another word from you. I never want to see you again. Oh, this is outrageous!"

6. LULU: "I suppose it will be a month before this stain comes off my face. I never want to see that Charley Onthespot again."
LEANDER (aside): "Ye gods, isn't it rich! That settles Charley Onthespot for good."
